

I chose to become an agent because of my own experiences when purchasing a house or being a child.

When I was young, my 4 sisters and I would pack in the car with Mom, and go driving around finding model homes to walk through. When doing this we got to pick the bedroom we wanted and dream about meal time, homework and Christmas. This was the time when we all got along. If one of my sisters wanted the bedroom I picked I would give it to her or if I wanted a bedroom that one of my sisters already "called" she would give it to me. When we walked out of those model homes, of course, everything changed back to being normal sisters fighting over anything and everything. Those were hours of my life that I would never give back. Just loved the feeling of how a new home made you feel and what it meant to you, no matter what your age.

When I was purchasing and walked into the "right" house, I just knew I had to have it. Remembering the feeling that it gave me. I like being a part of that with the buyers that I work with. You can see it on their faces, when they have just walked into that home, that they just know, is the "right" one.
